The relations between Germany and India are growing stronger by the day. Germany is India's largest trading partner in the European Union and India is the 7th largest

Asian exporter to Germany. India with its huge domestic market and growing purchasing power offers massive potential for Germany which in turn offers a competitive advantage in various areas of technology such as manufacturing, infrastructure and energy.

In times of global uncertainty and disruptive politics reliable partners are the call of the day. During the intergovernmental consultations between Germany and India, Chancellor Merkel and Prime Minister Modi underlined how the two leading economies of the world can rely on each other.
